RESEARCH INTEREST STATEMENT

I am interested in leveraging research to inform public policy in order to increase equitable outcomes for young children and families – particularly within the contexts of birth equity, identity development, early childhood education, and social determinants of health. I also have a line of research in which I use cultural-ecological frameworks and mixed methods designs to study the ethnic-racial identity development and socialization of infants and toddlers. The goal of my translational research is to inform policy and advance practice that cultivates inclusive mindsets, promotes radical self-love, and disrupts the development of ethnic-racial bias. The overarching aims of my scholarship and practice are to inform parents, families, early educators, and policy makers as they invest in all young children and build systems that enable them to thrive.
